ABSTRACT

This guide contains information about 1,002 college and university programs/services designed to provide assistance to students with learning disabilities, based on national survey results. The directory divides programs and services into seven delivery categories: learning disabilities programs, compliance programs, basic studies programs, life skills programs, supportive environment, support services, and institutions with no report. For each institution, the following information is provided: size, location, program name, special admission, extra fee, contact person, and telephone number. Appendices include a 4-year planning checklist, a post-high school planning worksheet, assessment forms, a college interview preparation form, a checklist of services/modifications and materials, and a sample of a completed college profile. Foreword

Students with learning disabilities often require the assistance provided through special programs and services in order to successfully enter and study at the college and university level. Working with a research grant from the National Association of College Admission Counselors (NACAC), Jim Alexander and Judy Rolfe conducted a survey of member institutions to ascertain the scope and availability of services to learning disabled students.

Surveys were mailed during the summer of 1990 to 1,224 college and university members of NACAC. This guide contains information about 1,002 programs/services at institutions that responded by the required date. The service delivery categories listed in this publication were selected by the postsecondary service providers and do not reflect evaluative statements made by the researchers.

The National Association of College Admission Counselors is pleased to be able to add Guiding the College-Bound Learning Disabled Student: A Directory of Programs and Services at NACAC Member Institutions to our growing list of guidance resources aimed at helping counselors help college-bound students.

Introduction

COLLEGE PLANNING FOR THE LEARNING DISABLED STUDENT

Post-high school planning for all high school students requires commitment to a developmental process. It is essential that the student assume the major responsibility inherent in the planning process. The role of the counselor and parent is supportive and facilitative, not directive. To assure appropriate choices and maximize success, the student must take charge in the decision-making process. College is not always the best or only post-high school option. All students should consider the alternatives before making definite post-high school plans. For the learning disabled student, the planning process may take longer and require additional steps since there is a paucity of material available for student consumption. As a result, the authors have spent seven years developing a post-high school planning model for LD students which includes both the process and materials for those students who have identified a post-high school educational experience as the appropriate option.

The Highland Park High School (HPS) LD College Planning Program was developed seven years ago as a joint effort between the Special Education and Counseling Departments. The focus of the program involves a team approach to planning: the student, parents, counselor, and LD specialist/case manager. The program is developmental and ideally works best when all are involved beginning in the freshman year. Components of the program include: individual counseling appointments, group meetings, student field trips to postsecondary institutions, professional staff travel to a variety of campuses, slide presentations of schools visited, and resource centers in special education as well as counseling with specific program materials, professional reports, and computerized search programs. Prior LD students have given permission for current students to contact them regarding specific schools/programs. Professional staff visit with graduates during on-campus visits and mailings provide ongoing follow-up information. Professional responsibility is to provide a structure and facilitate information gathering and processing. Students are taught "how to manage the process." The ultimate decision-making responsibility is the student's. By focusing on self assessment, academic assessment, and program assessment, the team can facilitate healthy decision-making. Based on a follow-up study conducted in 1988-89, all former graduates who participated in the LD College Planning Program over the last four years and went on to postsecondary experiences were still enrolled or had graduated from college.

This publication contains an outline of the process and materials relevant to various planning stages. In addition, the results of a survey of NACAC member institutions will provide specific data on potential options and contact sources. The combination of these two is intended to make the student search more organized and productive. The counselor's role in assisting the student should be enhanced through the use of these materials. (See Appendix A, "Four-Year Planning Checklist.")

The essential components to successful planning include self assessment, academic assessment, and program assessment. Identifying individual needs, setting priorities, and obtaining relevant information require a systematic approach to counseling learning disabled students.

SELF ASSESSMENT

Self assessment involves identifying individual strengths and weaknesses, how the student learns best, and an evaluation of the learning environment which leads to identification and selection of appropriate accommodations. A psycho-educational evaluation is required for documentation of the specific learning disability. This information assists the LD specialist and counselor as they work with students to identify strengths and weaknesses, etc. Self assessment requires not only the identification of individual strengths and weaknesses, but understanding and acceptance on the part of the students and those who work with them. (See Appendix B, "Student Learning Profile.")

ACADEMIC ASSESSMENT

A review of the student's four year plan/high school course selection and performance is essential when considering post high school educational experiences. In addition, other test data such as the SAT and/or ACT may be useful. Teacher input regarding student performance may also be revealing. Consideration should also be given to student interests and goals as they relate to strengths and weaknesses, i.e. how realistic are the goals? (See Appendix C, "College Record Sheet", and Appendix D, "Strengths and Weaknesses/Learning Profile Sheet.")

PROGRAM ASSESSMENT

Only after the first two assessments have been completed should the student become involved in evaluating post high school educational options. It is essential to examine the institution in light of individual needs as well as interests. "Getting in" is not the primary issue. The goal in final program selection should be, "Can I stay in and achieve success?" (See Appendix E, "College Interview Preparation Worksheet;" Appendix F, "Postsecondary LD Questionnaire;" Appendix G, "Checklist of Services/Modifications and Materials;" Appendix H, "HPS College Profile Sample Form;" and Appendix I, "Sample of a Completed College Profile—Muskingum College.")

The following listings are meant to be starting points for information gathering. Students should be encouraged to utilize knowledge gained from self assessment in making inquiries and decisions.

User's Guide

PROGRAM/SERVICE DELIVERY CATEGORIES

The following directory, which lists LD programs and services at NACAC member institutions, offers a starting point in the search for appropriate postsecondary options for LD students. Upon completion of his or her self assessment and academic assessment, a student is ready to begin evaluating post-high school options. Once the student and counselor have determined the type of program or service necessary to succeed in a postsecondary setting, they can look for institutions which offer the appropriate program or service. The directory divides programs and services into seven delivery categories:

- Section I: Learning Disabilities Programs
- Section II: Compliance Programs
- Section III: Basic Studies Programs
- Section IV: Life Skills Programs
- Section V: Supportive Environment
- Section VI: Support Services
- Section VII: Institutions with No Report

Each category of program or service is described on the introductory page to that section. Some institutions administer more than one type of program or service and are listed in more than one category. The service delivery categories listed in this publication were selected by the postsecondary service providers who responded to the survey and do not reflect evaluative statements made by the researchers. (A sample copy of the survey appears on the next page.)

DIRECTORY INFORMATION

After the student and counselor have chosen a service delivery category, they can search for schools within that category that meet the student's other postsecondary requirements. For each institution, the directory lists the following information:

- Size—very small (under 1,000); small (1,000–5,000); medium (5,001–10,000); large (over 10,000).
- Location—East, Midwest, South, West.
- Program Name—Institution's name for the particular program or service available.
- Special Admission—Indicates whether or not there is special admission consideration for LD students.
- Extra Fee—Indicates whether or not there is an additional fee for the program or services provided.
- Contact—Name of admission/LD contact who can provide more information about the institution and available programs and services.
- Phone—Telephone number of contact person.

Counselors and students can identify institutions which may match the student's needs and then telephone the contact people to request more detailed information about specific institutions and programs/services.

SECTION I

Learning Disabilities Programs

Colleges and universities listed in this section all have programs for learning disabled students. The student must provide documentation of a specific learning disability. An LD Specialist(s) and structured support services are the backbone of the program. Some or all of the following services may be included: special admission, academic advising and/or priority registration, remediation, tutoring, teacher advocacy, testing accommodations, course waivers, skills classes, notetakers, books on tape, word processing lab facilities, diagnostic testing, etc. There may be an additional fee for program participation.

SECTION II

Compliance Programs

Colleges and universities listed in this section provide services in compliance with the law. Many institutions identify one individual (titles differ by institution) to assist them in complying with Section 504 of Public Law 93-112 (The Vocational Rehabilitation Act Amendment of 1973). Section 504 states that a student may not be discriminated against by reason of handicap. Learning Disabled students are covered by this law. The compliance individual may or may not be LD certified, deliver direct services, have a staff to deliver services, refer LD students to existing programs on campus (LD program, Support Services Program, etc.) or do the minimum to comply with this law—make sure faculty comply with student rights. LD students must provide documentation of the handicapping condition and must take the initiative to ask for and obtain services. Usually this service is provided without an additional fee.

SECTION III

Basic Studies Programs

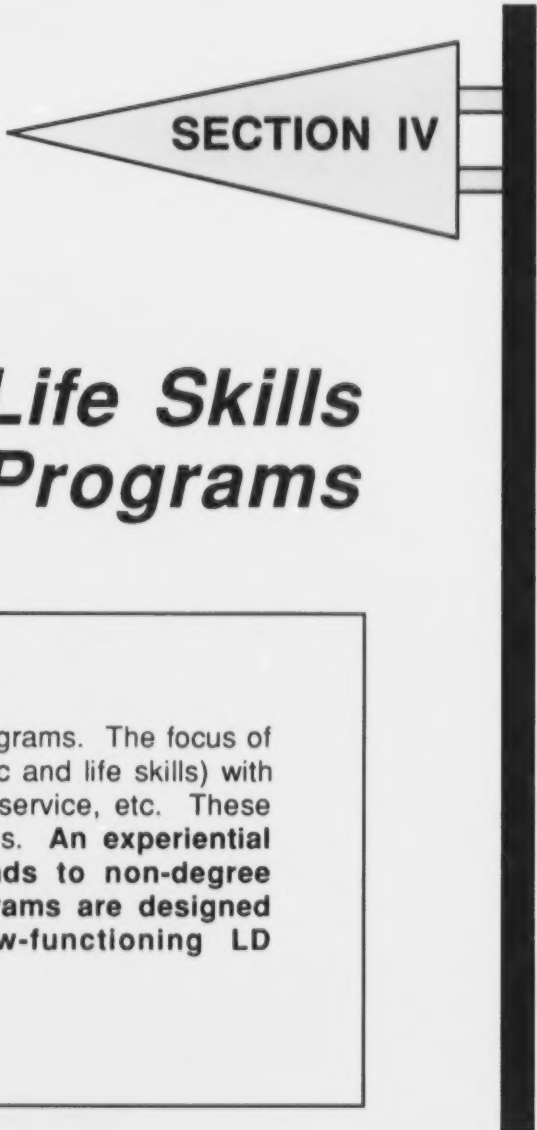

Colleges and universities listed in this section offer basic studies programs. Basic Studies is a separate curricular division within an institution. A high degree of structure, small classes, and selected faculty are key ingredients of a Basic Studies Program. The program is usually one to two years in duration and may lead to an associate degree or apply towards transfer to the same or other institutional four-year programs. Frequently, a student's potential rather than high school record is considered for admission to this program. Because of the imposed structure and frequently the concomitant services, Basic Studies Programs may serve LD students. Some remedial courses and counseling services are usually a part of the program.

SECTION IV

Life Skills Programs

Colleges and universities listed in this section offer life skills programs. The focus of this program is basic skills review and reinforcement (academic and life skills) with specific training in child care, geriatric paraprofessional, food service, etc. These programs are usually separate facilities on traditional campuses. An experiential approach to skill building and vocational planning leads to non-degree status upon graduation from the program. These programs are designed to serve high-functioning, limited learners and low-functioning LD students.

SECTION V

Supportive Environment

Colleges and universities listed in this section provide a supportive environment. The environment is one where services are delivered on an individual basis by faculty and staff. No organized support facility exists, rather personal attention to student needs is valued by all who work with students. It is more likely that a small school will fit into this category. For the LD student with a documented learning disability, the documentation may help to explain to faculty why and what support is needed.

SECTION VI

Support Services

Colleges and universities listed in this section offer support services. Services are available to all students. Regular structured support is not provided and students must initiate requests for specific services. Typical services include: tutoring, word processing, writing, and math labs. Institutions individually may offer other support services for some LD students. For some LD students, these services are all that is needed. There usually are no fees for services; tutoring may be an exception on some campuses.
